Dive recovery in Stillaguamish River near Arlington

The body of a 23-year-old Marysville man, last seen sometime Sunday in the Big Rock area of the Stillaguamish River, was recovered today in that same area by Snohomish County Sheriff's Office divers.

The Sheriff's Office was contacted shortly before 10 p.m. Monday by Marysville Police who reported that the man was possibly in the Stillaguamish River.

Given the lack of visibility and exact location information, the Sheriff's helicopter and divers had to wait until this morning to begin their search and recovery mission. However, search and rescue workers did a shoreline search late Monday night to see if they could find the man. They were joined by Tulalip Police and tribal members since the missing man is a tribal member. Tulalip tribal members continued with the ground search after search and rescue workers left.

This morning, the Sheriff's Office helicopter flew over the area and the crew spotted a body in the river near Big Rock. Divers were called in to recover the man.
